If you work or volunteer with people in any capacity, you need to know the facts about the most important public health study ever conducted – the Adverse Childhood Experiences Study. Almost 2/3 of American citizens have been exposed to at least one Adverse Childhood Experience. Find out how this impacts development, education, work and health – well into adulthood. The research around ACEs will change the way you think about the challenges our society faces and how we can create a more resilient community.

This training is intended to raise awareness for students or new professionals in the health and human services field in any entry level or direct service position.
